K. Laurence
Survey of the archaeological remains of ancient Greek sanctuaries and their importance to ancient society and religion. This course examines the archaeological evidence for Greek religion from the Bronze Age through the rise of Christianity. We will begin with an examination of the religious practices of the Minoans and Mycenaeans, and explore a theme that will recur throughout the semester: how to identify ritual through the archaeological record. We will proceed with a survey on Classical Greek religion, focusing on the creation of sacred space, ritual practice, and the role of religion in the world of the Classical Greek city-state. We will especially study the origins of the Panhellenic sanctuaries, including Olympia and Delphi, and the social, cultural, and historic role the Olympic Games and the oracle of Apollo at Delphi played in the Greek world. We will also pay special attention to Athens, where we have the most information about the annual religious calendar, and study the Akropolis and the sanctuary of Demeter at Eleusis and the festivals that were celebrated there. We will also focus on the changes to Greek sanctuaries in the Hellenistic and Roman period and how these spaces were used as a common cultural interface with foreign powers and, eventually, the Roman emperors.
